Human and rat form of the 5'-nucleotidase (EC 3.1.3.5) does not bind to phospholipid vesicles. The vesicle-binding properties of the rat and human form of 5'-nucleotidase have been investigated. It was found that the human enzyme, when expressed in both the native state and after its overexpression in E. coli, was predominantly associated with membranes. Moreover, the purified rat and human enzyme forms, respectively, did not bind to phospholipid vesicles containing high concentrations of the substrate ATP. On the other hand, as a result of other overexpression attempts, the rat enzyme was found to be associated with phospholipid vesicles, although the absolute amount of the enzyme was considerably lower than that present in the membrane fraction of the native rat enzyme. Moreover, the absolute amount of the rat enzyme was considerably lower than that present in the membrane fraction of the native rat enzyme. The data indicate that the vesicle-binding properties of the rat and human enzyme forms are different from those described earlier for the human (Slavina et al., 1991. Biochemistry 30, 14590-14596) and rat (Mironov et al., 1988. J. Biol. Chem. 263, 14784-14790) forms of the enzyme.
