A: A marquee tag is a piece of HTML that automatically displays and disappears with a timer or repetition. It is generally created for use on the bottom of web pages for advertising purposes. It supports the `</marquee>` tag and CSS properties which determines where the marquee be going and how long it is going to be visible for. So, probably it may auto-close the tags of the marquee in the response code ABC, and of course you may consider put your own HTML codes as well. NPCs are not animated properly, they just stand around a lot, and there are no events. On top of that, it is very slow to load. The number of paragraphs on a page is also... strange.
