Download Link Registration It has been reported that the Irish magazine Red Rover is planning a "get even" video ad campaign to retaliate against homophobic groups in the wake of their party's failure in the recent referendum to legalise gay marriage in Ireland. The publication claims the ads will be targeted at "homophobic groups", and will be funded by the "gay rights movement", which is set to launch a €1 million "counter campaign" of "unacceptable hate". Homophobic groups will be named in the article and dubbed "homophobic" on the magazine's website. "Homophobic groups" are set to lose out in the new equality referendum. According to The Irish Times, the Red Rover article, along with a "wobbly roof" piece in the Irish Independent, set the scene for the new "get even" campaign. The news comes as small, but Ireland, gay groups have threatened to sue the Irish "anti-gay movement" for allegedly stifling the "will of the people" during the marriage referendum and abortion debate. In an editorial on Monday, the Catholic newspaper The Irish Catholic explained: "That victory by the anti-gay side may well cause bitter tears and acrimonious recriminations, but they can hardly be anything other than beneficial to society. ♦
